THE ROMAN FORUM

Caesar VIIII, Vitellius

Those whispers of possible revolt of the Rhine Legions abruptly became a full throated battle cry when on Jan 2, they proclaimed their general Vitelius, to be an emperor. His march on Rome did not begin immediately but rather after he had received the news that Galba had been assassinated. In fact, he did not make his entry into Rome until about July 18, even though he had been recognized by the Senate as early as Apr 19, just two days after the death of Otho.

There are two widely contrasting stories of the ancestry of Vitelius. One praises with dedicating him with Faunus an aboriginal king of Italy and with Vitelia who was worshipped as a goddess. The other, much less flattering, says his line was from one Cassius Servulus a shoemaker whose son made a comfortable living first as an informer and then as a dealer in confiscated property before marrying a common prostitute, the daughter of a baker (3) Vitelius was born on Sept 7, or 24 14 A D His boyhood and adolescence were spent on Capri among Tiberius's degenerates (4) There he was given the nickname Spintral(5) for surrendering his chastity to Tiberius This "label" clung to him for the rest of his life It is no wonder he became a court favorite as he was notorious for every kind of vice Caligula admired him for his skill at chariot driving, Claudius for his skill at dice Nero was always presuaded to enter the lute playing contests (6)

His appointment as governor of Lower Germany was unpopular A friend and fellow supporter of the "Blues" at the Circus, Titus Vinius, was behind this appointment His huge crowd of creditors, which included the people of Sinuessa and Formiae whose public funds he had embezzled, were continuously demanding payment Galba had openly stated that he feared a glutton least of all as a rival, so the door swung open to the appointment

His reign began by sacrificing to Nero's ghost an ill omen His vices were gluttony and cruelty His own mother was starved or poisoned, according to the story His gluttony even taxed Rome in its expense One of his last act of cruelty was the burning alive of Flavius Sabinus, brother of Vespasian and other of the Flavian family as he viewed the scene while banqueting in the mansion of Tiberius He is pictured by Suetonius as being unusually tall with an alcoholic flush a huge paunch and a limp--the result of a chariot crash, the driver being Caligula

For some time he refused the title Augustus, and for some reason never did adopt the name, Caesar(7) So on Dec 20, after being put through the "torture of the little cuts", Vitellius was finally killed near the Stairs of Mourning

His body was dragged by a hook to the Tiber and thrown into it (8) He was 56 years old

The coinage of Vitellius falls into three distinct periods (9)

1 His accession to the fall of Otho January to April Coinage was at Lugdunum in gold and silver and at Tarraco of asses only

2 His victory over Otho to his entry into Rome, April to July Rome now struck gold and silver while Lugdunum and Tarraco continued as in period one

3 His entry into Rome to his assassination, July to December Rome now coined in all three metals Lugdunum now uttered only small amounts of gold and silver but adding aes Tarraco issues were as Lugdunum.

The gold and silver from Rome may readily be identified by comparison with those of Otho However no aurei are to be found of the first issue (10) All first issue coinages are bare head, as was Otho, and was of short duration The second issue from about the beginning of May to July 18 now depicts Vitellius with a laureate bust but now carries the legend A VITELLIVS GERM IMP AVG TR P (11)

The style of Tarraco is distinct with the spidery (12) reverse types and neat regular lettering which contains IMP GERMANICVS where AVGVSTVS is normally expected A mark globe at the point of the bust is also distinctive The issues of Tarraco with a legend which includes the title AVGVSTVS and rare

To Lugdunum are assigned a small group of aurei and denarii which are [illegible] Rome or Tarraco Lugdunum was quicker than Tarraco to proclaim for Vitellius (13) and was, for a time, his capital These issues may be identified by their association with those of Vespasian, less expressive portraits but better proportioned reverses The gold and silver issues belong almost entirely to the first period with the bulk being struck before Tarraco began striking The aes, however, belong entirely to the last month or two (14)

Of the total issues, only the gold may be considered scarce, this being from the standpoint of the gold alone Naturally we must expect some reverse types to be less frequently encountered than others The attractiveness of high grade aes, especially the sestertii, place them many times, out of the range of the young and/or the novice collectors

As a parting statement it may be said that much of Act III overlapped with Act IIII as Vespasian, the final role, was introduced in July of the year of Four Caesars

A SWORD, SCALE, AND SCROLL

During the years before Mexico gained her independence the coins of the Spanish kings circulated freely throughout the land. These kings were not liked by those Mexicans who desired to see an independent Mexico. As a result of this, the coins of the Republic of Mexico did not bear the portrait of a living person. The coinage of both local and federal mints bore a wide variety of designs, many of which had a personified figure of Liberty or a Liberty Cap.

During the latter part of the 19th century federal coins adopted the "Balance Scale" design which incorporated the balance scale, a sword and a scroll. This design was found on silver 25 and 50 centavos and one peso coins. Gold coinage with the Balance Scale design included the 5, 10 and 20 peso pieces.

The reverse of the Balance Scale coinage has a design similar to that of all Mexican coinage. The Mexican eagle, facing right, is perched on a cactus. The date and legend "REPUBLICA MEXICANA" complete the design. The obverse design features a scale similar to one that might be used in assaying precious metals. Above the scale is a liberty cap with a sunburst which resembles the design found on the 8 real coin. Below the scale is a scroll with the word LEY (law) written on it. Running behind the scroll and the scales is a sword. Below the design is found the value, mint mark and fineness.

Much can be interpreted from the Balance Scale design. The liberty cap above the entire design could symbolize the desire that the people of Mexico have always had for liberty. The scales stand for justice for all. Justice is supported by the scroll which symbolizes the constitution, the source of liberty and justice.

Balance Scale coins were first issued in 1869, three years after Emperor Maximilian had introduced the decimal system to Mexico. Twenty five centavos coins were issued from 1869 to 1892 at the following mints: Alamos (A or As mint mark), Chihuahua (Ca or CH), Culiacan (Cn), Durango (Do), Guadalajara (Ga), Guanajuato (Go), Hermosillo (Ho), Mexico City (Mo), San Luis Potosi (Pi), and Zacatecas (Zs). The 50 centavo and one peso coins were struck at the same mints.

It is interesting to note that for administrative purposes the mints were divided into the following districts: Central Plateau, which included Guanajuato, Mexico City, San Luis Potosi, and Zacatecas; Pacific, which included Alamos, Hermosillo, Culiacan, and Guadalajara; Northern Mexico, which included Chihuahua and Durango; and Southern Mexico, which included the city of Oaxaca.

The Mexican were reluctant to go to a completely decimal system and because of the unpopularity of the [illegible] design both at home and abroad (especially in the Orient) the peso [illegible] discontinued in 1873 and during the reign of the Mexican [illegible] it was brought back and

The [illegible] and Balance Scale [illegible] rather limited possibly due to the decline in the value of the silver peso. Gold coins of 5, 10 and 20 pesos were struck at the same mints mentioned above from 1870 to 1905 but circulation of these coins was limited. Because of this higher grades of these coins are often easy to locate.

In 1950 the Balance Scale was again used for circulation in Mexico. The design was used on 25 centavo coins from 1950 to 1953. The coin is quite similar to the design of the 19th century pieces except the eagle now faces left. Though minted in large quantities the coins never [illegible] circulation [illegible] This, however, is due to the fact that the 25 centavo [illegible] never been [illegible] For example, during December 1977 the author attempted to spend the 1964 25 centavo coin in a small town in Veracruz but the [illegible] refused because the [illegible] had never seen them!

Perhaps the best known Mexican coin with a Balance Scale is the 1949 ONZA. This coin is actually a bullion piece struck by the Mexico City Mint. It contains a troy ounce of .925 fine silver. The obverse of the piece has a balance scale without the liberty cap, scroll or sword, and the reverse displays a press used in striking coins.

HISTORY OF RUSSIAN COINAGE
CONCLUSION

Gold in Smaller Denominations

In 1610 Czar Vasili Shuiskii exhausted the State Treasury's silver supply to pay mercenary groups from Sweden. Under these circumstances Shuiskii began using the Treasury's gold supply for common coins.

Shuiskii issued gold dengas and kopecks of the same weight and shape as their silver counterparts, although worth 10 times more.

But Shuiskii was deposed a few weeks after the gold coins were issued, and gold coinage ceased although some were minted for a short while in Moscow.

The Reforms of Czar Alexei Mikhailovich

In 1654 Czar Alexei Mikhailovich instituted a series of monetary reforms to satisfy the monetary needs of the reunified Ukraine and to replace the Polish coins in favor there with Russian coins. Only four years later, Russia's monetary system was on the brink of disaster.

The Czar's plan was to circulate silver-based copper coins in place of the silver coins in use.

The State issued copper kopecks and copper yefimki (rouble fractions), but by 1662, the year of the Copper Riot in Moscow, the monetary system was returned to its pre-reform state.

Mikhailovich's reforms were unquestionable failures, but they did end free-striking privileges, giving the right only to the state.

Peter I

Russia's most important monetary reform began in 1701 under the direction of Peter I. It was under Peter I that copper coins were again minted and accepted by the public and the decimal system, which began spontaneously in other parts of the world at about the same time, took hold in Russia.

Although Western historians believe Peter I was influenced by the West, Soviet historians insist the decimal system was first put into use in Russia.

The new Russian coins were larger than their predecessors and were perfectly circular (unlike the dengas which were practically oblong).

The copper kopeck retained the design of its silver predecessors -- a representation of the Great Monarch on horseback. All other copper and silver coins depicted the State Emblem, the double-headed eagle, on one side. The reverse of all copper and small silver coins also carried the coin's value and date of issue. Copper coins also had circular inscriptions on both sides which mentioned the name of the Czar. Silver coins remained anonymous.

Larger silver coins had the State Emblem and the denomination and date of issue on the reverse. A bust portrait of the Czar and a legend appeared on the obverse with the mint mark on the edge.

Gold coins, called "Chervonetsy," also had the Czar's portrait on one side and the State Emblem on the other.

Copper Polushki struck in 1712 [illegible] the State Emblem on a [illegible] face but on the reverse [illegible] Polushki [illegible] issue [illegible]

All coins of Peter from 1700 were dated according to the new chronology (the year 1700 in lieu of CH-208 or 7208).

18th and 19th Centuries

From the middle of the 18th century through the 19th century, attempts were made to introduce unusual denominations which involved whole series of currency.

These included: The Menshikov Coins of 1726-27, which by the 1730's were virtually unredeemable and considered counterfeit because of their smaller silver content; the 1755 "Imperials" (10 roubles) and "Polumperials" (Half Imperials worth five roubles); the "Poluportsy" of 1726, with its unusual pyramid of 25 out of account, pattern roubles, commemoratives, coins of Khersonis of Taurida, square copper coins, the copper Sestretsk rouble of Catherine II, Siberian copper coins, platinum coins with duo-decimal values of three, six and 12 roubles (1828-1845) and numerous provincial issues.

20th Century

In 1915, Imperial Russia's coins received their last alteration. This occurred when St. Petersburg was renamed Petrograd making mint marks temporarily obsolete.

On Aug. 17, 1921, the first silver rouble of the Russian Soviet Federated Republic was coined. From 1923, 10 rouble pieces, called "Chevronets," were minted with the State Emblem on the

In February 1924, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics proclaimed its own system of copper and silver coinage.

One rouble and 50 kopeck coins were to be made from 1000 carat silver. 20, 15 and 10 kopecks were to be of 500 carat silver, while five, three, two and one kopecks were made of copper.

In January 1926, the government issued five, three, two and one kopeck pieces made of 95% copper and 5% aluminum. In February 1932, nickel coins of 20, 15 and 10 kopecks were introduced into circulation.

In January 1961, five, three, two and one kopeck pieces were made of copper and zinc and the 10, 15, 20 and 50 kopecks and one rouble were issued of copper and nickel.

In 1962, the complete series was again struck, but without the rouble or the 50 kopeck coin.

In 1963, one and two kopecks were struck, and in 1964 and 1965, one rouble, 50 and one and two kopecks were struck (the rouble and 50 kopeck coins bearing the denomination and date of issue on their edges).

In 1965, a new rouble was struck commemorating the 20th anniversary of USSR's victory over Germany. The coin is peculiar in that its diameter is larger than past rouble issues.

April 21, 22 and 23. Mark these on your calendar now! For those of you who don't know what's going on, let me give you a few hints. It's going to be the biggest thing in Texas. And Texas is known for everything being the biggest. It is going to be in Amarillo. And Amarillo is known the world over. It will be the best because the Amarillo Civic Center is the best. It will be very exciting because it will be filled with activities the whole day through. The activities will be like none before.

I want to get rid of a few rumors you've heard about Amarillo. The rumor about Amarillo not having any motels is false. Amarillo has a lot of motels, but unfortunately not many are downtown but they're working on it. Another rumor that the wind blows all the time in Amarillo is false. It blows 99.9% of the time. Maybe you'll be lucky and it rains. doubtful but maybe. For you ladies, the rumor Amarillo is no place to shop is false. We have shopping centers and quite a few separate stores. Again. Most of them are downtown but we have a few that are. Juniors, I guarantee you will have a good reason to come but I'm not going to tell you what it is yet, but it's all planned.

IT'S COMING! DON'T MISS IT! YOU'LL BE SORRY IF YOU DO!

MEXICAN NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

'Twas the night before Christmas and all through la casa
Not a creature was stirring, Caramba! Que Pasa?
The stockings are hanging con mucho cuidado
In hopes that Saint Nicholas will feel obligado
To leave a few cosas aqui and alla
For chicos, chicas (y something for me!)
Los ninos are snuggled all safe in their cama
(Some in ver-tidos and some in pajamas)
Their little cabezas all full of good things
They're all esperando que Santa will bring
Santa esta at the corner saloon
Muy borracho since mid-afternoon
Mama's sitting beside la ventana
Shining her rolling pin para manana
When Santa returns to his home zig-zag-ing-ado
Lit up like the Star Spangled Banner, clanking
And Mama will send him to bed con-a night
Merry Chrismas a todos, y a todos a good night!

What Is A Trillion?

How much is a trillion?

A trillion is a million million.

It's a one followed by 12 zeroes. It's 1,000,000,000,000.

A trillion seconds is equal to 31,700 years. In other words, a trillion seconds ago, Stone Age man lived in caves and mastadons roamed Europe.

A trillion inches is equal to 15.8 million miles.
